

Title of the Paper

Brief Note to the Author(s)

I view this report as being much more of a beginning of a conversation between us and the editor rather than me listing a series of hoops that you must jump through for publication. I welcome scholarly disagreement to any of the comments that I have left about your paper below. For the purposes of grammatical simplicity, I will assume that there is one author.

Summary

The paper asks both an interesting and very timely question that could appeal to a broad audience of...

Primary Concerns

1. Here is one primary concern.
 - a. Here is a sub-point to this primary concern.
 - Example 1: Here is a brief commentary about this concern. “Here is sample text from the paper that represents my concern.”
2. Here is a second sub-point to this primary concern.

Secondary Concerns

3. Inserting pictures is easy too!

4. Writing equations is the same as if you were doing it in LaTeX.

$$y_{it} = \alpha_i + \delta_t + \beta_1 X_{it} + \epsilon_{it} \quad (\text{Equation 4})$$

- Above I have highlighted a unit fixed effect.
